...affections.--These are divided into two kinds, the acute and chronic. In the chronic form nothing can be done. In general, children are seized suddenly, and they may die from the first attack. The immediate cause of convulsions is determination of blood to the head and congestion of the brain, nearly amounting to inflammation; the head perhaps sweats very much, the body at the same time remaining perfectly cool. On observing the fontanelles you perceive them beating stronger than at the wrist; this disease is apt to terminate in effusion into the ventricles. Should there be effusion, it will tend to increase the convulsions. Convulsive affections, if rightly treated, may do very well. Leeches may be applied to the temples, but taking away blood from the external jugular vein will be found the better plan, and it ought to be had recourse to very early to prevent the effusion from taking place; clear out the alimentary canal, for it may be from errors in diet. 9i of ipecacuanha may be mixed with 311 of syrup and gx of water; a third part to be given for a dose, and to be repeated in twenty minutes or half an hour, if sickness be not produced. This will often purge also; if not, you may give calomel, scammony, jalap, or rhubarb, according to the age of the patient. Emetics do not cause a greater flow of blood to the head; this seems to be from their not producing any straining. Examine the faeces and egesta; pay great attention to the refrigeration of the head. The head should be shaved, or the hair cut close. You must keep the head constantly wet by evaporating lotions, as the liquor ammoniae acetatis, applied by means of a sponge all over the head; this you may allow to dry, when you again wet it: this method will be found to produce greater evaporation than i...
