Come sono affrontati, in Italia e in Europa, i problemi dell'inserimento lavorativo e della costruzione di una carriera compatibile con gli altri impegni di vita? Questioni cruciali che coinvolgono ampie quote di popolazione e in particolare i più giovani. L'approccio orientato a premiare il lavoro tout court per risparmiare sulla spesa assistenziale si è dimostrato inadeguato ed è nata una nuova generazione di politiche sociali che si sforzano di promuovere le capacità di gestire in prima persona (di qui la formula di "empowerment") le responsabilità professionali e familiari. In questa prospettiva il cittadino deve essere messo in grado di costruire il proprio inserimento occupazionale e la propria personale formula vita/lavoro. A maggior ragione in Italia, dove appaiono vistosi - come mostra chiaramente il confronto con altri paesi europei - l'arretratezza dell'intervento pubblico e il ruolo di supplenza svolto dalla famiglia.
