A comprehensive, highly readable, gimlet-eyed analysis of the key issue of the BlackLivesMatter movement: the often lethally hostile relationship between American law enforcement and judiciary and African American men—by a gathering of distinguished American legal scholars.

What is the history underlying the contention? What are the racial disparities in our criminal justice system? What are the powers and discretions of police officers? How and when is racial profiling practiced? Is there implicit racial bias in the use of deadly force by law enforcement? What are the powers and discretions of prosecutors in bringing charges against police officers? What is the role of the grand jury in such cases? Whence the frequent lack of criminal liability for police officers? How complex is it to bring federal civil rights charges against police officers? Are prosecutors themselves ever held to standards of accountability? Is the exercise of prosecutorial power informed by racial bias? Whence the disproportionate imprisonment of black men? What are its collateral consequences for American society? In addressing these and other urgent concerns, Policing the Black Man is—simply put—an astounding revelation.
